

by Cyril John

There were two masons at work. Someone approached the first mason and enquired as to what he was doing. The mason replied, "I am placing one brick upon another." The visitor then repeated the question to the second mason and he said, "I am building a Cathedral."

The first mason could not relate what he was doing to the entire project of building a Cathedral. The second mason had a clear vision, for he saw his contribution in relation to the entire project. He always had in mind the project drawn up by the chief architect for the Cathedral. The same could happen to our intercession. We could continue to say prayers that do not go beyond our head or beyond the room we are in.....

To read full article, click here .